

WARNING:

THIS CHILD
CONTAINS TOXIC CHEMICALS

Oil spills, toxic landfills, industrial air emissions, polluted water. People everywhere agree: these unfortunate events and circumstances are all too common.

But there's a bigger story that you won't see on the nightly news: the same chemicals that contaminate our air, water, and soil also pollute our bodies.

It's true. Tests of people around the world show that a haphazard cocktail of industrial chemicals trespasses inside all of our bodies, causing cancer, infertility, developmental disabilities, autism, birth defects, and other devastating illnesses. These chemicals don't need a front-page toxic spill to find their way inside us.

Today's environmental health threats hide in unthinkable places.

- A brightly colored toy.
- A cartoon-covered lunchbox.
- A waterproof baby bib.
- A tube of diaper cream.
- A new computer.
- A shiny piece of children's jewelry.
- A baby's anti-diarrhea medication.
- A water filter.
- A sturdy, wooden play structure.

You shouldn't have to worry about lead, arsenic, and other dangerous chemicals in the products your family needs.

IS THERE ANYTHING YOU CAN DO

ABOUT A PROBLEM THAT IS CAUSED BY POWERFUL, GLOBAL INDUSTRIES?

YES.
YOU CAN JOIN

THE CENTER FOR ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH

We are a nonprofit organization that has forced these global industries to clean up their act for over ten years. From lunchboxes and baby bibs to diaper cream, children's jewelry, and play structures, we have driven major industries to protect the health of families everywhere.

This work is more urgent than ever. Today's elected officials and government agencies protect the profits of powerful industries at the expense of families' health. Fortunately, the Center for Environmental Health is watching out for you.

Just ask Chicago-area grandmother Marilyn Furer. Marilyn saw the reports when the Center for Environmental Health forced companies to remove lead from children's soft, vinyl lunchboxes. Later, when she noticed that her baby grandson Jensen's bib also appeared to be vinyl, she recalled the Center's advice: test the products yourself. What Marilyn discovered was shocking: Jensen's bib was contaminated with brain-damaging lead.

Working with Marilyn, the Center for Environmental Health got the dangerous bibs off the shelves of major retailers like Wal-Mart and Toys R Us. It was just one example of the results-driven work we've done to protect families for over a decade.

We hope families everywhere find inspiration in Marilyn's story. It shows how one person can make a difference. Partnering with the Center for Environmental Health, Marilyn forced huge, multinational corporations to sacrifice part of their profits for the sake of our children's health.

The Center for Environmental Health has built its first decade's worth of successes on partnerships just like this one. We are a resource for responsible businesses, government agencies, and people like Marilyn who are serious about protecting their family from toxic chemicals. With the Center for Environmental Health by your side, you too can make a difference.

Toxic chemicals affect us all, and we can replace them with safer alternatives.

At the Center for Environmental Health, we help families fight the use of toxic chemicals because we believe that health is as precious as it is delicate.

THIS WORK HAS NEVER BEEN MORE IMPORTANT.
